The New York Times reports that the Pompidou Center in Paris has hired Sylvia Chivaranond to be its first adjunct curator based in New York.

Ms. Chivaranond will be, according to The Times, “keeping the Paris curators up to speed on the contemporary art scene,” which sounds like a pretty sweet gig.

Here’s some info on Ms.Chivaranond from the press release.

Art historian, independent curator and critic Ms. Chivaranond holds art history degrees from Leicester University and UCLA. Her notable curatorial projects include exhibitions at the Walker Art Center, the Museum of Contemporary Art in Chicago, Tate Gallery in London and the 2003 Venice Biennale. Over the past ten years she has overseen exhibitions and publications with contemporary artists including Dan Graham,
